BURLEY CROP

300,000,000 Pounds, Says Supervisor
McDowell of Lexington—Maysville Second Largest Market in the World.

William C. McDowell, supervisor of sales on the Lexington tobacco breaks, estimates that the crop of white burley leaf marketed this season will reach the grand total of three hundred million pounds.

In a report covering the markets of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia and Missouri, the only states in which the type can be grown, it is shown that 241,370,765 pounds had been sold to March 1. It is calculated that up to yesterday the total had grown to 276,916,776 pounds, and he estimates that there is in the neighborhood of twenty-five millions yet to be sold.

Compared With Last Crop.
An interesting feature of the supervisor's report is a comparison of the present crop with that of the year previous, which amounted to 205,000,000 pounds.

While the crop now being sold has averaged $3.74 per hundred less than the average on this market last season, Mr. McDowell figures that the mere return will be larger, in spite of the comparative inferior quality of the 1914 crop. He reviews the adverse conditions under which the crop was produced, harvested and housed, and closes with suggestions as to care of the leaf which would compel higher prices.

Supervisor's Report.

Mr. McDowell's report follows:
